The Elizabethan era is the epoch in the Tudor period of the history of England during the reign of Queen Elizabeth I (1558–1603). Historians often depict it as the golden age in English history. The symbol of Britannia (a female personification of Great Britain) was first used in 1572, and often thereafter, to mark the.

The diet in England during the Elizabethan era (1558–1603), depended largely on social class. The rich ate meat and white bread, the poor ate dark bread. Everyone drank ale as water was often too impure to drink. Fruits and vegetables were seldom eaten. Rich spices were used by the wealthy to offset the smells of old. I know the Elizabethans used to make soap balls from grated soap and herbs, but they would not be as efficient as a bar of Castile soap, which is very hard and if not.

About Tudor hygiene: Henry VIII hated stench and was repulsed by smelly women and there were many smelly women AND men in those times. Sanitation in Elizabethan times was awful. The cities had no sewage systems, the people did not bathe regularly, everyone was drunk and-or throwing up, and it was too crowded to avoid any of this. No wonder the Bubonic Plague spread like wildfire throughout England. People did not take the time to pick up their city of.

It was a long-held superstition that diseases were carried by smells and that cleanliness was next to Godliness. Even peasants were cleaner than we were lead to believe. Elizabeth I abhorred bad smells and being a bit whiffy would earn you a one at ticket to exile from court. So much so that ladies began.
